Open Call 2027: Urban Ecologies, Coexistence and Control

Project proposal: Who May Stay (working title)

A site-based video and sound work for the Lendhafen, made on site and shown on site at dusk.

1. Idea and central questions

In my city, Irbid in northern Jordan, pigeons are kept on the rooftops. Men build wooden lofts on top of family houses and fly their flocks in the late afternoon; the birds circle the neighbourhood and return when called. The pigeons are cared for, fed and named. The keepers, on the other hand, are often distrusted by their neighbours, because watching the sky from a roof also means seeing into other people's yards. So in Irbid the bird is welcome and the human who looks after it is the one under suspicion.

In many European cities the relation is the other way round: the pigeon is the animal that is regulated, discouraged with spikes, nets and signs, while the people who feed it are tolerated or told off. Your call names the pigeon directly, and this is the question I would like to bring to the Lendhafen: who decides which living things belong to a place, and what does that decision look like, materially, at the edge of the water?

Who May Stay is a short, quiet observational film made over several weeks at the Lendhafen, about everyone and everything that uses the harbour: birds on the water and on the railings, pigeons under the structures, dogs, cyclists, swimmers, people who feed animals and people who clean up after them, and the small devices of control (a sign, a spike strip, a fence, a lamp). Woven into it are a few short sequences filmed on rooftops in Irbid with pigeon keepers who agree to take part, so that two ways of living with the same bird stand side by side without commentary.

2. Implementation in public space

Format: a process-based project in two phases. Phase one (about four weeks, June 2027): I live in Klagenfurt and film at the Lendhafen at different hours, mostly early morning and dusk, with one camera, natural light and directional sound. I talk with people I meet there and, with their consent, record what they say about the animals and about the rules of the place. Filming itself is visible and open: anyone who asks can watch the camera monitor and see what I recorded that day. Phase two (about six weeks, August to September 2027): the finished work, around 15 minutes on a loop, is shown every evening from dusk to about 23:00 on the site itself, projected onto a wall, the underside of a structure or a simple stretched screen beside the water, with two small speakers at low volume.

Location: I have not yet been to Klagenfurt, so I do not want to fix a spot from a photograph. The working assumption is a sheltered surface close to the water, facing the path, where people already sit in the evening and where the projection does not light up the water or nearby windows. The exact place would be chosen with Lendhauer during the first week of phase one, according to power access, permits and the habits of the animals (no projection on nesting or roosting places).

3. Materials and process

Nothing is built permanently. The installation is a weather-protected projector housing on an existing structure or a small standing frame, a media player on a timer, two compact outdoor speakers and one cable run to an existing power point (or a battery box charged daily if mains power is not possible). The screen, if one is needed, is reusable fabric on a timber frame that can be taken down in an hour and reused by Lendhauer. Energy use is low (one projector of about 200 W for four to five hours a day). No printed vinyl, no single-use materials; the few printed elements (a small plate explaining the work in German and English, with a QR code to the full film) are on recycled board.

Timeline: Jan to May 2027: research by correspondence with Lendhauer, first rooftop sequences filmed in Irbid. June 2027: four weeks of filming at the Lendhafen. July 2027: editing and colour in Irbid; draft shared with Lendhauer and with the people who appear. August to September 2027: installation, six weeks of evening screenings, one public evening with a conversation, and dismantling.

4. Audience and accessibility

The work needs no ticket, no text and no explanation: someone walking along the harbour at dusk sees moving images of the same place they are standing in, at another hour, and hears it. People who were filmed will find themselves, their dogs and the birds they feed in the work. The film uses almost no speech; the few spoken parts are subtitled in German and English. Everyone who appears in it sees the cut before it is shown and can ask to be removed. On the opening evening I would hold a public conversation at the site about living with animals in a city, open to anyone, with an invitation to the people who took part.

Preliminary estimate of production costs

Item	EUR (gross, estimate)
Outdoor projector rental or purchase (about 5,000 lumens), 6 weeks	1,200
Weatherproof projector housing and mounting	450
Media player with timer, cables, power distribution	250
Two outdoor speakers and small amplifier	350
Reusable screen fabric and timber frame (if a wall cannot be used)	300
Sound recording and storage media for the filming period	200
Local transport of equipment, small materials, fixings	200
Information plate (German/English, recycled board) and subtitles	150
Contingency (about 10%)	300
Total production	3,400

Camera, lenses and editing are my own equipment and are not charged. Accommodation during the filming period would be covered from the artist fee and the travel allowance. Final figures depend on the chosen location and on what Lendhauer can lend.
